Effects of sex and age on appearance-based judgments of sexual attractiveness in women. Attractiveness is a social trait that manifests itself as an indicator of a person's relative sexual quality. We investigated whether judgments of the sexual attractiveness of women were influenced by their sex or age. In 2 experiments, we investigated the role of sex and age in a visual search task in which participants observed and rated the sexual attractiveness of women's faces. Stimuli varied in the age of the women in the images, and 2 other cues were varied: sex of the women and attractiveness of the clothing. Results of the first experiment demonstrated that age influenced judgments of the sexual attractiveness of the women. The second experiment showed that the sex of the women in the images did not influence judgments of the sexual attractiveness of the women. In both experiments, the sex of the women in the images influenced judgments of the attractiveness of the clothing worn by the women. The results support the hypothesis that women's physical features of sexuality are influenced by both age and sex. It is clear that women's physical traits of attractiveness are affected by the presence of their sex and their age, but their influence is differentially dependent on the variables in the sample.[Study on the influence of certain factors on the comprehensive efficiency of cardiac pacemaker therapy]. 1. To determine the physical and mental state of the pacemaker patient, the heart rate and the residual heart activity are to be determined and a good correlation can be found between these parameters. 2. In patients with an acute infection of the atrium the heart rate is to be monitored for four days. More than a 50% reduction should be considered as a significant infection. 3. In patients with a more or less permanent block of the conduction system, the occurrence of a long time Q-R interval, the ventricular contraction frequency and the ventricular extrasystoles can be considered to be important for the indication of the necessity and the type of an electronic device. 4. In patients with a sinus node dysfunction, the determination of the atrial cycle 50b96ab0b6
